Father James

Someone described prayer as a bridge between our conscious and unconscious lives. That's a pretty good definition. What I see and feel consciously, with full awareness, is what contributes to my everyday existence and helps me identify with the world around me. What I see and feel unconsciously – in dreams and memories and cultural values – helps me nurture and understand the world within me. Prayer, as an action directed towards God, draws my outer and inner worlds together, helping to complete me as a person. Body and soul need to be in tune with one another if the image of God, in which each of us is made, is to have a chance to breath, live and make a difference. Prayer bridges the gap and completes the picture. On the journey of life, prayer is one of the food parcels I cannot do without.
